Shalom laYehudim, Shalom laBnai Noach, Shalom laGoyim. It's the evening of the 6th day, kaf-dales beShvat, tav-shin-ayin-beh, Parashas Mishpatim, the evening of the 5th day, Thursday, 12 February, 2015, webcasting from the source of Obama's obsession.

Israel. That is his obsession, and I say that on the basis of his inaugural address in which he aggressed against the Jews in America certainly; and on the basis of the next day's activity, his first phone call as President of the United States who wanted to "fundamentally change" America, to Abbas, the Holocaust-denying Muslim murderer of Jews, head of the most famous Jew-killing cult since Germany's Nazis.

Indeed and coincidentally, as I mention in my book, when Fatah came together as a terrorist cell, Arafat called his boys "Storm Troopers" in full awareness of the connection to Nazism and in fact gave them photographs of Adolph Hitler to carry around in their pockets.

And it is behind their cause, Fatah's cause, that Barack Obama stands. One fundamental change he made in American foreign policy was taking the side of the Fatah PA in the matter the 1967 lines. Israel, since '67, in harmony with United Nations Security Council Resolution 242, has never foreseen a return to those lines, while the mantra of the Fatah is a Balestinian state based on the '67 lines. And Obama took their side in violating 242.

In effect, he also, like the deep thinkers among Western anti-Israel Leftists, wants to see an Israeli retreat from Judea and Samaria where the Fatah PA will take over and administer their brand-new, old-new State of Ancient Palestine they will bring back to life.

And because Israel has not done that, agreed to that, Israel is in the doghouse. Israel is the obstacle to peace in his universe.

Israel is also rebelling against the very wishes of the President of the United States when famous Jewboy Martin Indyk has tongue-lashed Israel, “If you want our help, you must do as you are told.”

I heard him say that one morning on Israeli political talk show radio and was amazed at how like a villain right out central casting this man has become. He is a caricature of a Jewboy, who has hired himself out to the gentile tyrant to give the Jews their marching orders from which he of course is exempt. In the death camps in Europe 70 years ago, barracks were administered by capos, Jews who for their betrayal had better rations and were protected from the worst punishments. Here was Martin Indyk, Martin the Turkey – turkey in Yiddish is indyk – and he is representative of certain kinds of Jews when gentiles aggress who feel compelled to publicly disassociate themselves from the people they were born into. It is a form of prostitution.

And that was a top story here in this vein today: the continuing tempest caused by the Prime Minister’s impending speech and how it is affecting Jews in America and particularly those in Congress: who among the congressmen and senators of Jewish extraction will show up and who will boycott. So far, for sure, and there is no surprise here, Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont will boycott. He was born a New York City Jew, who moved to Vermont in the funky 1960s or early 70s as a sworn socialist. No adherent of the ideology of the Jews, their religion, he was a socialist and has so defined himself ever since. Not a Republican, not a Democrat; an independent socialist. Of course he feels no affinity of us here in Israel and it is more important to pledge allegiance to his president. Being asked to choose between backing the leader of Israel and the leader of his country, of course he backs his president, and if that means the Iranians get the Bomb and dropping it on Tel-Aviv, G-d forbid, so be it, in the mind Bernie Sanders.

Another Jewish Senator Brian Schatz of Hawaii will also boycott. Just as the Sages taught thousands of years ago, one way the Children of Israel maintained their identity in the two centuries they lived in Egypt (as representative of future exiles) was giving their children Hebrew names, and here is yet another American Jew named Brian whose wife is by her photograph clearly from the Far East and therefore not a Jew. And the odds are excellent she was never converted properly, meaningfully, or maybe not at all.

For sure, according to his career, as Lieutenant Governor of Hawaii, Brian Schatz applauded, like a good Democrat, sodomy and the marriage of sodomites to one another. Definitely not a Jewish position.

So, of course, Bernie and Brian will boycott the speech given by the head of the Jews in the Land of Israel who does not support the policy of their President of the United States of America. Bernie and Brian are American patriots, and the fact that this president is also an enemy agent of America, well, this does not concern them. Loyalty for these post-Jews is the highest value, not concern for the people of Israel now being threatened by this enemy agent.

But it is among the J Street-type Jews that hostility to Israel was most pronounced this week whose venom spit in Israel's direction is most apparent and loaded.

Maybe you saw their advert with the message "No, Mr. Netanyahu. You do not speak for me," words next to a picture of a grim-looking Bibi.

Notice the focus of these self-styled Leftists and/or progressives here: it is not on the danger to the very existence of the State of Israel but on me (!) "You don't speak for me." That's the message because Bibi said he speaks for Israel and all Jews. "You don't speak for me. I am the most important actor here."

So the issue for these J-Street types, who I have found borderline delusional, is their own self-identification as people not to be identified with the Jews in Israel who democratically chose this man to lead them. To be opposed to Bibi is to be opposed to Israeli democracy.

It is just further evidence of how what originally the Left stood for has morphed radically into something else altogether. Once the Left, the socialists, were concerned with decent working conditions and livable salaries; with social injustice done to Negroes; with the communists demanding outright the nationalization of all business as in the Soviet Union. The Left today, though, is little concerned with social and economic distress and much with issues of personal enjoyment important, these contemporary narcissists of ours. It was in the 1970s that American intellectual Christopher Lasch wrote a very interesting and pioneering book on how the 1960s culture had produced his book's title – The Culture of Narcissism. The J-Street Jews don't want to be identified with the hated Jews in Israel led by that dreadful Mr. Netanyahu who does not love the Ancient Palestinians and does not cry himself to sleep every night over what the Zionists did to them and continue to do to them.

J Street launched a petition stating that not all Jews agree with Israel's prime minister regarding Iran and the relationship with the White House.

Yes. A serious percentage these days of people calling themselves Jews voted not once but twice for Obama the Muslim Brotherhood agent, with maybe a half of them calling themselves Jews who are not, legally speaking. This is what the Reform “blessing” of intermarriage in the early 1980s has led to.

And how interesting that Obama, who was sold to the electorate as the culmination, the end of racial divisiveness in America, became the greater polarizer among the races, and he is also the great divider among Jews in America.

But then again, with every passing day, it becomes less an accurate description of Jews in America who call themselves Jews since the majority now know no more about Jewish belief and practice than their gentile neighbors, their gentile wives and gentile husbands.

And in this atmosphere, and in light of the gravity of the situation, I think Bibi can and sure will in his speech pull out all the stops and speak the truth: that we in Israel, not just him, not just Benjamin Netanyahu, have lost faith in the good will of this president of the United States, he who passed over the truth that the slaughter of Jews at the Hyper Cacher was no random act of urban violence by some guy going postal. It was the deliberate massacre of Jews, no less than any deliberate massacre of Jews in thousands of years of history. A president who overlooks that fact has no credibility in the eyes of people in Israel.

Neither are we impressed with this president’s management of American foreign policy in the Middle East in general, in our neck of the words, the forever bleeding Muslim Middle East whose leading religion Islam is a violent, antisemitic doctrine.

I think Bibi might think of verbally drawing a bead on Barack Hussein and metaphorically shooting him between the eyes and exposing this fraud for the antisemitic, anti-American, anti-Christian villain that he is.

Yes, I wouldn’t mind seeing Prime Minister Netanyahu in his address to Congress deliver an apostrophe to Obama – that is a technical, literary term meaning an address to someone who is not present at the moment. Netanyahu can ask the president why he is doing this. Why he is letting these people sworn to our destruction progress toward the manufacture of even one, small, old-fashioned A-bomb which would be sufficient? And indeed, one of the Muslim lunatic priests who rule in Teheran even said that in public some years back. He said, “All we need is only one Hiroshima-size bomb to destroy of the State of al-Yahud, G-d forbid.

I would applaud our prime minister for doing that, asking the absent President Obama why he is letting these Iranians who were involved in 9-11 and so many other acts of horror known these days as terrorism – that's politics outside the boundaries of civilization – why he is letting them do this. Terrorism is the weapon of gangsters, of outlaws, who recognize no laws of war, no civilian criminal law either. They are criminal barbarians.

Bibi's goal is to persuade enough legislators to vote to sanction Iran more heavily than ever, not to lift sanctions; have enough votes to override Obama's veto.

The past has shown sanctions to have been effective, and there is no greater evidence of Obama's hostility to Israel than his partial lifting of sanctions last November. Simple logic should have led him to the intensification of sanctions.

Bibi has twice before won dozens of standing ovations in Congress giving a speech and now must make the speech of a lifetime in order to strengthen the hearts of these congressmen and women and senators to go against their president's policy because as the prime minister said this week, "The U.S. offer to Iran would threaten Israel's survival."

Bibi has to tell Congress that what their president is doing with Iran is no more worthwhile than his policies have been elsewhere in the Middle East. Bibi should tell them clearly, politely, but truthfully that his life experience as a native of Israel, as a soldier, a politician, a diplomat makes of him an analyst of Israel's situation superior to Barack Hussein. Bibi should say that we in Israel do not believe that working as a community organizer on the south side of Chicago or showing up occasionally in Springfield, Illinois as a state senator is sufficient preparation for understanding what goes on here and making fateful decisions about the Jewish people in the Land, the wasteland, they brought back to life. Bibi must convey to his audience that as Obama botched Libya, botched Egypt, botched Iraq and so forth, so he hasn't got a clue over the right path for Israel to go in the Middle East vis-a-vis Iran. Our lives, our freedom and our society are on the line and diplomatic protocol and politesse will not stand in the way and should not prevent him from speaking the truth that when it comes to the Middle East, Barack Hussein Obama is, in Israeli eyes, a know-nothing and worse: a malevolent know-nothing hostile to Israel, hostile to the interests of America and the West.

I hope and really believe that Bibi is being helped unwittingly by his rival for votes Naftali Bennett. On Sunday of this week, as Minister of the Economy, he addressed 26 of the 28 ambassadors from the EU stationed in Israel and told them, "To single out Israel, to twist our arms economically in the hopes that we will commit suicide, because financially we'll get hit if we don't, is immoral from my perspective."

Good. And I think speaking like this also drives Bibi to be more direct and bold in his statements. Here was Bennett telling these European antiJews, “You are asking us to commit suicide,” and I hope Bibi can lay it on the line for Obama and his audience in Congress and say that what Obama is doing is a threat to our survival and that this is no way to treat an ally.

Problem is, of course, that Obama is a Muslim and that is why he omitted the reference to slaughtered Jews in the Hyper Cacher. That is why he did not fly off to Paris over the Charlie Hebdo massacre. He is ideologically, emotionally incapable of criticizing fellow Believers who took revenge against infidels who mocked Muhammad his prophet, the greatest of all time.

Obama said in his 2012 address at the UN that the world had no room for those who “slander the Prophet of Islam.” Charlie Hebdo staffers did that and thus got what was coming to them in Muslim eyes and hearts like his.

I think too that Bibi is being energized by Bennett’s shameless patriotism and Zionism. This week the prime minister scandalized the arts community here by sacking two judges from a committee tasked with handing out the most coveted prize in Herzlandia called the Israel Prize, in this case for literature. The two sacked were two professors, one at Tel-Aviv University, one at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, because, in the prime minister’s judgment, they are anti-Zionist. Bibi shamelessly wrote on his Facebook page as acting Minister of Education that he had the authority to fire these two academics for their anti-Zionist political views and activities, including the functionally seditious advice to soldiers from one of them not to serve in “the territories,” as such types call Judea and Samaria.

And he took this step in protest at the one-sided political make-up of the committee, these judges which like our Supreme Court judges are dominated by the anti-religious Left. Bibi said this committee had “too few authentic representatives of large parts of the nation. This situation, in which a small and closed group of extreme positions passes the baton from hand to hand and retains control over the selection of the winners of the Israel Prize, has to change. Because the Israel Prize belongs to all the people of Israel.”

Amen.

Yes, I am rooting for Bibi all right to make a barnburner of a speech, his best ever, which might include mention of the story of Purim. His speech will in fact be delivered the day before the Fast of Esther as we prepare for the next day’s Purim celebration, when we celebrate our survival after death threats from Persia, precursors of today’s Iranians.

And as the climactic scene in the Purim story is the exposing of Haman to the king as plotting to kill all the Jews in the Persian Empire, Queen Esther's people, so Bibi might expose Obama for the true villain as evidenced by policy toward Teheran. He is one bad actor.

Daniel Pipes yesterday reported on a closed door meeting in the White House eight days ago between the president and more than a dozen Muslims living and working in the States as academics or in Muslim NGOs. Pipes called them "a curiously unimpressive and motley collection of modestly accomplished individuals of little renown." But he noted that most were, most importantly, Islamists. Not one of them was an anti-Islamist.

One imagines that this group is striving to be an imitation of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations for Muslims, only as Islamists, unlike the mostly deJudaized but very patriotic Americans in that umbrella group. Islamists by definition, all of them want to fundamentally change the country, just like their host.

And he, just like them, is an accomplice of conquering Islam. There is no other way to understand his policy choices. Too many people think he is incompetent; I don't. I think he adamantly refused to fly to Paris to honor victims of Muslim avengers, so all of his moves in the Middle East can be categorized as no serious resistance to the march of Islam. In his mind, Mubarak was a non-religious military man, that is, too non-religious for Obama's taste, while the opposition was the Muslim Brotherhood that believes, as Obama does, in the rightness of having a government of pious Muslims over a more secular set of rulers.

This fellow, as we saw at the National Prayer Breakfast a week ago, sees his job as explaining Islam to America. It is not explaining America and defending America to Islam and from Islam.

And like all Muslim antiJews who dominate at the UN to the detriment of other world problems crying out for help, so Obama, in his obsession with Israel, has done nothing of note to defend fellow Christians in the Middle East and fellow black Africans being murdered by the thousands by Muslims in Africa. In Nigeria, they say hundreds of thousands of people already have been turned into internal refugees, homeless in their own country after fleeing marauding Boko Harum savagery. Thus far, according to reliable reports, in addition to the masses of refugees, the communities they ran from -- their schools, churches, police stations, homes -- have all been destroyed and looted by Boko Harum. And you would think this self-advertised Christian in the White House might use the power and resources of the U.S. to defend those people.

But no. He is too busy negotiating, if it can be called that, with Iran in order to allow them to keep Israel in a state of perpetual fear of an Atomic bomb launched from Iran.

I hope Bibi speaks the truth, which should include sticking it to this evil man and while he's at it, give it to John Kerry as well, who recently was rated by historians the worst secretary of state in a half century, who betrayed his country and his comrades-in-arms in the military in the 1970s, the male Jane Fonda of the era, who has his own record of antiJew nastiness.
