Shalom laYehudim, Shalom laBnai Noach, Shalom laGoyim. It's the evening of the 6th day, kaf-khes beNisan, tav-shin-ayin-heb, Parashas Tazria-Metzora, the evening of the 5th day, Thursday, 16 April 2015, webcasting from Israel after Holocaust and Heroism Remembrance Day, marked by a somber address by the Prime Minister and later what seems to have been a fresh, ritual Jew-killing.

The prime minister's words were last evening unnerving for their honesty. Because his delivery is so low key and measured, I fear few will heed him.

His focus of course for the occasion spoken at Yad Vashem was the recent P5+1 capitulation to Iran, a country the prime minister likened to Nazi Germany. He took note of the now reflexive, politically correct expression on such days of "Never Again" spoken by Western world leaders when formally, ceremonially honoring the Holocaust, but then they lust for deals with Iran and decide to sell out the six million Jews in Israel. Bibi rightly spoke that number.

He described Iran's aggression in the region, its shameless, public expressions of wanting to destroy the State of Israel, G-d forbid, and took note of the deal making with Iran as if its intentions were not known by the P5+1.

He quoted the Prophet Yeshayahu, in English Isaiah, who spoke of "darkness, deep darkness covering the earth" as the Prime Minister referenced the blindness of those in Lausanne to what their eyes tell them of this country of Iran. He made the chilling point that the lesson of the Holocaust has not been learned -- though as usual for an Israeli he did not explicitly name and describe this lesson. Israelis like Bibi have a hard time with that.

He used the word “tyranny” to despise Iran’s regime. True enough, but it is a special kind of tyranny. Bibi may have used the word antisemitism in his speech to refer to anything but its recrudescence elsewhere, if at all, for Israelis have a hard time linking it to our mortal enemies. Israelis like Bibi find it hard to explicitly accuse Iran and other Muslims of old-fashioned Jew-hatred expressed in classical fantasies of Jewish evil. One example is Iran referring to the U.S. and Israel as the Big Satan and the Little Satan, though sometimes Jew-hatred like this flips the relationship and Iranians imagine Israel as the great power manipulating its puppet the U.S.

Hitler believed that. He believed the Bolsheviks to his east were Jews in the Kremlin plotting against him and that the clash between capitalism and communism, the empires of Wall Street and the Kremlin, was only a mirage, a Jewish deception, for the Jews were simultaneously behind the capitalists and the communists against him and his Third Reich.

In other words, while the prime minister likened Iran to Nazi Germany, he still might have gone further and targeted the P5+1 countries for being up to their old tricks vis-a-vis the Jews.

On the bright side of the news, though, since last webcast, we did see the unanimous Senate Foreign Relations Committee this week, 10 Republicans and 9 Democrats, all in agreement that whatever deal His Holiness Imam Barack Hussein comes up with for Iran, Congress must oversee it and approve it.

That vote was therefore quite a statement, the closest thing in the American system to a vote of no confidence in the government that in other systems leads to bringing down the government. The heart-warming side of the vote was the unavoidable truth for the Democrats that their president is not to be trusted in his handling of foreign affairs, specifically in the Middle East.

This is, after all, the Foreign Affairs Committee and all its members read the news; the Middle East since their president (the Democrats) took office has exploded and the prognosis for American interests in the region is bleak, even ominous.

In other words, after six years, the truth about this man Obama can no longer be denied. During the Lausanne talks at the end of last month, even the MSM could not refrain from reporting that inside the negotiations, the U.S. had become a spokesman for Iran against the others.

So that’s been this week’s good news but it was little comfort last evening listening to the Prime Minister address the assembled dignitaries at Yad Vashem to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the end of World War II when the full extent of the Nazi madness and evil it drenched the world in became apparent.

And then after midnight, another Jew was murdered, and another Jewess who was with him remains fighting for her life after what seems to have been a deliberate vehicular homicide again with an Arabian at the wheel who seemed to deliberately run over those two Jews.

The victim was a counselor at the Bet El Yeshiva, Shalom Yohai Sherki, h'y -- which means "May G-d avenge his blood" for man cannot. Jews don't believe in revenge. Nothing can bring him back to life, this son of a distinguished rabbi, a young man beloved by his charges. He was buried late this afternoon. I guess being the eternal people means eternally being martyred in every generation, in varying degrees of intensity depending on the circumstances.

In every generation, assuming last night's crash was deliberate, there is no shortage of men and women so crazed with hatred of Jews they believe all Jews deserve to die and even, for Muslims, what a great way to leave this life and enter the eternal drunken orgy in paradise by murdering Jews and dying in the process.

Though the driver was reported to be in not serious condition. If he was hoping to kill himself too, he failed at that.

But it has always been that way, hasn't it? I mean, in every generation there is no shortage of people who think Jews are evil and all of us deserve to die. You can read some of these peoples' talkbacks on the Net, experience their hysteria, those who think we stole Balestine from the Balestinians and persecute them every day. Jew-hatred has this hysterical flavor to it, a hallucinatory aspect found in the haters who imagine Jews committing evil deeds that we don't.

Jesus on the cross is a Jew who in his final moments was the guiltiest man alive, laden with all the sins of mankind, and to this day in varying degrees of intensity in the West and the East, we Jews are seen as the guiltiest nation on earth which does not have the right to exist it is so guilty. There were going to have a conference on that in England last month.

One day, please G-d, the goyim, leastwise the uncivilized among them, will learn to confront and deal with their own guilt and stop trying to unload it all on us.

Yes, the Prime Minister was right to cite Isaiah on "the deep darkness covering the earth," which comes to mind as we contemplate the meaning of the P5+1 powers kowtowing to Iran.

And then today's Wall Street Journal piece by former Attorney General under President Bush 43, Michael Mukasey and Kevin Carroll, in which they responded to remarks by CIA Director John Brennan the other day attacking those who criticize Obama's plan for Iran. They called for Congress to appoint a Team B of analysts for they believe the CIA is now incapable of objectivity on Iran.

The Team B concept, by the way, dates from the 1970s under President Ford who was dissatisfied with the CIA's analysis of the Soviet Union and its intentions and appointed an outside team of experts -- Team B -- to provide a competing view.

Now Mukasey and Carrol are citing the administration's handling of Benghazi and Bergdahl and the release of terrorist chieftains for him, as they reject Brennan's defense of Obama the other day.

What is absent from their op-ed, of course, were the rumors at the time of Brennan's appointment two years ago of his conversion to Islam. True or not, video of him singing the praises of Saudi Arabia to Saudi Arabians must be seen as cause for alarm, for how could a red-blood American patriot wax to positive about a country and culture so at odds with everything America stands for? Brennan was CIA station chief in Riyadh when he is rumored to have converted, and one can only wonder what he found to be so attractive in this religion and the culture that was on display all around him.

Mukasey and Carroll simply do not believe that in the CIA run by Brennan with his Obama-like defense of Iran, any intelligence not supporting his support would be suppressed.

In other words, once again as we were told two years ago when Obama was re-elected and chose Brennan, who though raised a Roman Catholic was reported not to have taken the oath of office on the Bible but the Constitution, again we are worried for the future of the U.S. and by extension Israel.

The Prime Minister last night alluded to our isolation in his speech, obliquely suggesting that Obama and the P5 +1 countries have abandoned us, and we will go it alone if we have to.

And yesterday the Washington Times, citing Judicial Watch, reported on an ISIS terrorist training camp just over the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas, in Mexico's state of Chihuahua whence ISIS terrorists have already been smuggled into the U.S. via the border Obama has refused to close. For that behavior alone he should have been removed from office a long time ago.

Again, the thought comes to mind of future historians who will marvel not only at Obama but more importantly how the American people and their representatives did nothing to stop him.

It has been a terrible failure of nerve on the part of the culture, of this generation of Americans, who now seem far removed from the so-called "greatest generation" of 70 years ago.

Yes, it was a sober and somber national Holocaust & Heroism Remembrance Day. It is our day, as a state. It is unlike the UN-invented international one in January in which the Holocaust is mentioned but then is followed by a whole train of victims in history in order to dilute the message of the Jew-hating Holocaust, since implication the victimizers of women and blacks and sodomites and short people have also suffered terribly at the hands of Nazi-like bigots.

The Prime Minister likened today's Europeans to their forebears who appeased Hitler during the 1930s – even as he was planning to invade his neighbors. Today they are ready as well to let Iran keep its nuclear capability, he said. “Many in the world declare that the lessons concluded [after the Holocaust] are valid today. They declare, ‘Never again... We won't ignore the aspirations of violent tyranny.’ They promise to oppose the bad things when they emerge,” Netanyahu said. “But as long as these words aren't put into practice, they're meaningless.”

Notice as well how Bibi's refers to “violent tyranny” as the enemy instead of violent, demented antisemitism, the thoughts that fueled the Nazis then and Iranians today.

He said further, “Iranian leaders are exporting death and destruction. The world is not listening to the calls in Iran urging ‘Death to Israel, Death to America’... The bad deal with Iran signals that the lessons of the Holocaust have not been learned. Appeasing these [tyrannical] regimes will only increase their proclivity to aggression, and if this aggression won't be stopped in time, humanity may be dragged into much harsher wars.”

The morning's weather today was fittingly weird and foreboding. It was a full blown winter rain storm here with hail, lightning and thunder atypical of the season, but in conformity with the gloomy thoughts of the Holocaust then, and, as the prime minister told us, Iran's dreams of another holocaust tomorrow.

On the bright of the news, though, was the report on YNET of the development by our defense ministry and defense industries of a new tunnel detection system invented since last summer's 50 days of missile terror and the threat of invasion via tunnel by mad dog Muslim assassins.

The report praised the record time from conception to completion of this system, but one imagines it could not have been too difficult a task. Measuring earthquakes has been around for decades, and planting enough ground sensors around the Gaza rectangle, and along the northern border, should do the trick.

This news this morning also ironically fit the day, for what we talking about is tunnels dug by homicidal Jew-haters who want to use them to penetrate Jewish communities to murder Jews at random.

One wonders how many other peoples in this world live in fear of homicidal maniacs for neighbors suddenly popping up in the middle of their children's kindergarten to slaughter them, G-d forbid, in the name of Allah.

One shouldn't be too surprised though. Yesterday the New York Times reported on the American troops now back in Iraq some four years after Obama pulled them out and how some of them are simply stunned by the collapse of the Iraqi army they had trained. Evidently, in short order after their departure, the officers went corrupt; their underlings went corrupt. Desertion was rife, training ended, everything fell apart.

Though I, for one, am not stunned by this report. In the 14th century, one of Araby's top historians Ibn Khaldun writing from Tunis addressed the inability of Arabs to serve in formal army formations.

Indeed, it is difficult for them to remain loyal to the state they live in, let alone its armed forces. As “Lawrence of Arabia” was shocked to discover among his Bedouin raiders the absence of any sense of national identity and cohesion, so should we not be, as we witness the nation-states created by Lawrence’s England and France after World War I collapse after a mere two generations.

Iraq has become a battleground between religions: Muslims vs. Christians, Muslims vs. Yazidis and other religious sects; Sunni vs. Shi’a. In Syria too, the death count now is over 220,000. There it is Muslims vs. Alawites, Jihadis vs. Jihadis vs. Alawites. Yemen is a Sunni-Shi’a battleground. Libya too has split apart east and west and reverted to its tribal culture. Egypt is bled every day by Muslim Brotherhood enthusiasts, murdering police and military; the Brotherhood and all of its sub-groups. It is hard to keep track of them all.

So this has been an abbreviated webcast because on this day the country kind of comes to a bit of standstill. The TV stations in the evening in Israel go dark. During the day they show documentaries and feature films about World War II.

The day is filled with events marking the Nazi madness. The newspapers carry one story after another about the war and survivors’ tales.

And last night another Jew was (probably) murdered by another Muslim for whom killing any Jew is a pious and virtuous act.
