Shalom laYehudim, Shalom laBnai Noach, Shalom laGoyim. It is the evening of the 2nd day, tes beKhodesh Teves, Parashas Vayekhi, tav-shin-ayin-vav, the evening of the 1st day, Sunday, 20 December 2015, webcasting from the Land of Israel where every day goyim try to murder Jews.

Let's see, on Friday, Israelite warriors were the target of what the MSM here calls a "Palestinian man" in a car who tried to run them over near Silwad; that is an Arab settlement a few miles northeast of Ramallah. But the warriors escaped unharmed and managed to put the would-be Arab assassin to sleep for all eternity. Afterwards, they found a knife in the vehicle; that's part of the technique these days.

And in Ramallah itself, a violent mob aggressed against Israeli troops and they had to shoot one of them dead.

And then yesterday in the afternoon of the Holy Sabbath in upscale, coastal Ra'anana -- no racist fascist imperialist settlers live there -- a different "Palestinian" man snuck up, as I understand it, behind a couple sitting on a park bench, a 40-something woman and 60-something man, and plunged his dagger into the both of them then ran into an apartment house, into an apartment where a woman alone fought him off and pushed him out; then he ran and hid someplace and eventually was arrested -- unfortunately -- by police. How sad. They should have put him to sleep like a rabid dog.

And last night, amazing IDF intelligence and operational excellence led to killing Samir Kuntar, who should have been killed decades ago. In 1979, he committed one of the most horrific murders here and then spent 29 years in an Israeli prison, was released in 2008 for the remains of dead Israeli soldiers and in recent years has worked with Hezbollah to help them in their crusade to kill Jews and destroy our independence and of course, being Arabs, loot the country afterwards.

You know, like Vienna and Austria and really all over Europe a generation ago, when Jews were not only massacred in the millions but also stripped of their wealth in the millions. Vienna, for example, like Amsterdam, was 25% Jewish before the War and those Jews had homes and furniture and cars and bank accounts and businesses and department stores, all now in the hands of goyim. The Holocaust was not only a great massacre but also no less armed robbery on a continental scale. And these Arabs may be religiously Islamic but remain Arabs whose pre-Islamic culture religion was one of armed robbery.

So in response to Israel's amazing keeping track in Lebanon of Kuntar and obliterating him last night via some aerial projectile, three missiles were shot into northern Israel this morning. Air raid sirens went off, people scrambled.

Imagine that: Air raid sirens in the year 2015 just like 70 years ago in 1945, only Europeans haven't heard such sirens in all those decades when we Jews have hardly gone a year since then without hearing them. As I say, not a day goes by without a goy or two or three trying to murder Jews or planning to do so in the near future. Think of that: not a day goes by without some goyim in the neighborhood around here planning, daydreaming, about murdering Jews at random.

Anyway, aside from this daily violence report I feel obligated to speak about, some good news was the continuing focus on the Breaking the Silence traitors. A press conference was held today, led by Yair Lapid on the offensive, and that truly is good news for he represents the ultimate in post-Jewish Israeli culture, people who commonly hate us settlers being protected by the IDF. For the Leftists who support these traitors, the solution to the alleged abuse of the "victims of Zionism" is to withdraw them all and let us dreadful settlers fend for ourselves.

But not Yair Lapid, thank G-d. He spoke for 600 IDF reservists, officers and soldiers, who don't like Breaking the Silence along with us National Religious types. Lapid said, "Organizations like Breaking the Silence have crossed the red line between criticism and subversion."

Likewise, the head of a pre-military academy and a company commander in the reserves, Amit Deri, said, "Who are you, Breaking the Silence, claiming to represent us IDF soldiers and tell us that we threw the code of ethics out the window? Breaking the Silence tells blood libels about us in the U.S. and across Europe. They say the IDF deliberately harms civilians. You may criticize but you cannot lie. Breaking the silence is no longer legitimate."

Very nice.

In addition, Im Tirtzu has sent letters to major contributors to the New Israel Fund and asked them to stop funding their anti-Jew slander operations and listed like a dozen of them: Breaking the Silence, B'Tselem, Gisha, the ACRI, Bimkom, Rabbis for Human Rights, etc.

More dishonesty in this last group. As discussed last webcast, the head of Rabbis for Human Rights is this Arik Ascherman, were he honest, he would call it “Rabbis for Ancient Palestinian Rights to the Land of Israel and the Right to take it away from the Jews.” Here is a so-called rabbi, Reform of course, who does not believe in the promise made to Abraham in his first conversation with the Creator of the universe Who is going to give him this Land.

No, Ascherman is big supporter of Balestinian Nationalism, which is, if nothing else, the claim that the Jewish claim to this country is a lie and the Ancient Palestinian claim is the authentic one. Balestinian Nationalism is as delusional as National Socialism was in its claims about the perfidious Jews. The Nazis furiously accused the Jews of wanting to overrun the whole world, when of course that was the Nazis’ dream for themselves. And, likewise, when the Arabs snarl that Israel is stealing their land, it is really their wish to steal ours.

Not surprisingly, the New Israel Fund replied to this new Im Tirtzu initiative of writing letters to its donors and asking them to stop supporting this blood libel against the IDF, saying, “Our donors know very well who and what Im Tirtzu is, the organization designated as having fascist attributes by an Israeli judge and whose most recent attack on four human rights leaders are lies that provoke and endanger their safety. Im Tirtzu’s credibility, given their history of incitement and their shadowy funding, is null and void in the U.S. Our supporters understand that in a democracy, upholding human rights and listening to unpopular voices telling the truth about their own experiences enforcing an unjust occupation is both difficult and absolutely necessary.”

Yes, this has all the symptoms of the spiritual disorder of the Left. We criticize them, and they say we are inciting people to murder them, endangering the lives of these four leaders with our lies. And of course they speak of an “unjust occupation.” A Jew who speaks of an unjust “occupation” has left the Jewish people.

There’s more to their response but I’ll stop here. It’s enough to expose how thoroughly these American Jews have been assimilated into non-Jewish American culture; how, the word I prefer, dejudaized, they have become. “Assimilated” can have a positive connotation, which is why I don’t like the word in this context; such as assimilating new information and knowledge about something; that is great. But when speaking about an “assimilated Jew,” it means a dejudaized Jew. It refers to a loss of identity, not the acquisition of something new and better.

In defense of the New Israel Fund types, I would say they are so far gone, they don’t even know it. They seem unaware that what they are doing is what homicidal, antisemitic goyim have done for generations: they are accusing Jews of murder, sadism, killing and abusing Ancient Palestinians for no good reason other than their own innate, ugly, sadistic, Jewish cruelty.

Do to individual Israeli soldiers occasionally aggress unnecessarily against the Arabs here? Of course they do. And when reported, they are punished.

What Breaking the Silence does is imply that this is IDF policy to act like this. As Amir Deri said at the press conference, they accuse the army of throwing away the code of ethics that the IDF teaches its soldiers. I doubt these American Jewish leftists have any awareness that they are acting like antisemites throughout the ages.

Typical of them in the NIF reply is the name-calling, citing some deJudaized Israeli jurist -- and there is no shortage of them -- calling Im Tirtzu 'fascist.' I am always pleased when my own critics get into name-calling like this for I take it as evidence of the value and accuracy of my view, for all they can do is name-call. They have no counter-facts and reasoned arguments to challenge what I say. And that is the same here.

I think last night as well there was a smaller crowd, a rally in Tel-Aviv in support of BTS types, but more important is that 600 of these reservists have signed off against them.

So in this regard it has been a good news day, especially when such as Yair Lapid leads the charge.

* * (Musical Interlude) * *

So kicking back at these Israeli Jews engaged in subversion, using Lapid's word, backed by deJudaized American Jews, was good news, but not so another item about the Jews in the UK. On Wednesday, the veteran and normally spineless Jewish Chronicle newspaper ran an interview with the new chief rabbi in the UK, Ephraim Mirvis, who made a U-turn compared to his previous resistance to a government diktat that all British schools have to teach, as I understand it, about another religion, a second religion rather than the majority faith of the school or community. The rabbi had at first resisted, and one argument for that was the requirement functionally telling the Jews in their schools to take time away from teaching about their own religion to teach about another. It was estimated that the Jewish religious studies would be reduced by 25%.

But now he has reversed course and agrees that Jewish schools should teach Islamic studies too. Now, he said, "It is more important than ever that our children have a better understanding of Islam and that we build strong relationships with British Muslims. Islam is a faith which is widely discussed but often poorly understood in public discourse."

And I for one am horrified by his words here.

Of course, the tiny Reform movement in England praised the rabbi for this turnabout. Their chief rabbi, a woman, said teaching about Islam was an "excellent idea and long overdue."

This is frightening and another example of dhimmitude. These are ignorant Jews if they think that it is possible to teach Islam honestly and, as the directive implies, to say nice things about this religion because, after all, isn't Islam one of the three great monotheistic, Abrahamic religions that are down deep all the same, all worthy religions of equal worth?"

If I were Rabbi Mirvis, I'd tell the authorities, if we teach anything at all about Islam, it is going to be the Jewish Narrative -- like the Palestinian Narrative -- in which we teach our children that Islam is in its core a form of antisemitism evidenced by the constant persecution of Jews by Muslims in every century for the last fourteen.

We Jews may be required to teach about Islam, but the content will be ours and not written by some bureaucrat in Her Majesty's Government.

This week I will have another piece on the American Thinker website and it is about the 1st Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, whose words say there will be "no establishment of religion" in the new Republic and what the Framers really meant. No doubt hearing this story they would be spinning in their graves. It was their wisdom to rule that in the new Republic, religion was not the government's business. There would be no government office regulating religion; that is what they meant by establishment, a government bureaucracy.

And here in England, this sounds like the Framers' worst nightmare. The government is dictating to people that they reduce the time they teach their children of their own religion and must devote time to teaching about another religion and surely using a curriculum approved by the government.

I am interested to see what happens there with this. Let the Jewish schools spend some time teaching about Islam and pointing out that the Koran is more evidence of the theft characteristic of the sons of Ishmael; that the Koran is a plagiarized version of the Torah and worse; Muslims claim that the Jews plagiarized the Koran and the Torah is bogus.

One can only wonder what would be the reaction in on Fleet Street and in Parliament when it becomes known that the Jewish schools are teaching of the jezya tax, when Jews were forced to pay in order to retain the right to remain Jewish and not be murdered by Muslims.

In my book, I relate an episode in wartime Morocco. Think of Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman and Claude Rains in Casablanca. In Marrakech, I think it was, when the Nazis showed up and wanted to basically steal all the wealth in the Jewish community, they were asked by the Muslims not to do that but wait because the tradition was this: the Jews would be left alone to work and produce and create wealth for like 20 years and then the local pasha and his friends would tax the Jews to the point of taking all that they had produced away from them, thus turning them into penniless paupers who have to start all over again from scratch. The locals told the Germans to be patient and not mess with the system whose current cycle had yet to run its course.

I would teach in these schools of Maimonides and how he had to run for his life twice from Muslims as murderous as today's ISIS.

Surely, this British innovation will not be satisfied with a curriculum about Islam that is not politically correct.

Talk about fascism.

And it is happening in the states too, I am afraid. There was that story out of Virginia last week about parents outraged that their kids were being taught about Islam and surely about what a nice religion it is.

To repeat: governments in the West have no business regulating religious life. Roman Catholics have the right to teach whatever they want about other religions; Jews too, Muslims too. It is not for the government to be in the business of ordering religious communities what to teach about other religions. It is none of the government's business.

And as for the decision by the Chief Rabbi in England, it remains to be seen what he has in mind. If it is submitting to a politically correct curriculum, he must rebel. He should say, "We will teach about Islam as we experienced it over 14 centuries and not as some bureaucrat wants us to teach."

May the rebellion here today, led by the Israeli center against pro-enemy fellow Israelis, become a forerunner of similar rebellions in the West against this politically correct beautification of Islam.

Remember, that is what Imam Barack Obama was up to in Cairo when he said he did not want a world in which it was okay not to say nice things about the Prophet.

Islam is this generation is the menace to mankind to match the menace to mankind that was Communism during the Cold War and before then Nazism and Fascism in the hot one.

It will not do to persist with this cowardly descent into dhimmitude. Islam must be spoken about truthfully.

* * (Musical Interlude) * *

Speaking before as I often do about the menace of Islam and Muslim attempts to murder us, in another bad news item Friday's JPost hard copy reported that the successful Taglit-Birthright program will no longer lead its charges to the Western Wall on Shabbat Eve, which has long been a highlight of these free, ten-day, whirlwind trips for young Diaspora Jews. And the reason is the security situation. This visit has always entailed walking at dusk, as one does on the Sabbath, through the Old City to the Kotel/the Wall, but now that is considered too risky given the latest fashion in Jew-killing here, these sudden knife attacks. The Old City is all narrow alleys and dark corners.

I hope the government budgets whatever is necessary to guard these young Jews come to experience what it means to be a country in which everybody, aside from tourists and the Arabs, is Jewish and visit the Kotel, ground zero of the Jewish world.

It can be a most unsettling in the best sense experience. I think the government must not let this happen. I am sure the walk can be secured but for sure, it will cost money. Lots of overtime.

We cannot let the Muslims restrict our religious life like this any more than they already do. This is what the conflict here is really about, though mainstream Israelis remain still too far from that awareness and recognition that this is and has always been a religious conflict, which is why every peace plan based on material modalities, you know, where to the draw lines on the ground, never work. Because the conflict is not about real estate and never was.

The existence of the State of Israel and in particular its rule in Jerusalem and Hevron is experienced by Muslims and rightly so as a mortal threat to their religion, which is all they have in this world to ease the pain of living in such a miserable society.

Maybe some you saw that Memri.org release of a video of a Saudi politician, a member no less of the Shura Council of advisors to the king, one Ibrahim al-Buleihi, who in a TV interview recently attacked Arab culture's hatred of the Other for the Paris attacks by ISIS. "We are immersed in violence...We believe we are always in the right and that the falsehood of the other is absolute. This perspective makes us hate whoever does not agree with our thinking and our way of life." He said the Arab world cannot be held accountable for the ISIS attacks in Paris and 9-11 but for the culture behind them."

Right on. Another example of the fact that Araby does not lack for sober and clear-eyed individuals. The problem is they are like isolated flowers in a garden of weeds. Without a doubt, there are civilized people in Islam, but without a doubt they are so few and far between and represent no centers of power to change this culture.

Israel, I hope, puts up a fight and does not let the current fashion in attacking Jews here prevent this most popular event in this successful program financed by a few Jewish zillionaires to be interrupted. Something like 100,000, I think, young people have taken advantage of the freebie 10-day experience and going to the Wall on Friday night has been a highlight, they say. For sure, the majority enjoy themselves on the trip as they get to see the truth about Israel that they don't as consumers of the MSM in the West.

* * (Musical Interlude) * *

Two final items, both good news, sort of. The Czech Parliament in Prague, as beautiful a city as Paris, voted to reject the EU's latest version of the Yellow Star, labeling products as made, by implication, criminal Jews. The Czechs are as sophisticated as any nation in Eastern Europe and this is more evidence of that. They know anti-Jewism when they see it.

And the other item was good news for Israelis, if not yours truly. The UN now recognizes Yom Kippur as an official holiday, which means no official meetings can take place on that day and employees are free to take the take off.

Israel's ambassador to the UN Dani Danon calls it a "decisive victory that finally provides an official place for the Jewish religion in the world's parliament."

Danon was appointed by Netanyahu, whose one major book was A Place Among the Nations. Danon as far as I know is hard right politically but not religious, so there is a bit of irony in this story.

But sadness for yours truly that there are still Israelis like him who care what the UN thinks of us. For me, there can only be one good story to come out the UN: it will be the day Israel walks out of that cesspool of corruption and age-old antiJewism in modern dress. Who cares what the UN thinks of us and our religion?

Leila tov miEretz Yisrael.
